Monday, March 1st, 2010:

Dr. Judy Flynn presents "The Victorian Origins of Crime Fiction: The Sensationalist Novel".

Monday, April 5th, 2010:

Jack Bumsted presents his "Baker's Dozen" of favorite crime fiction.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO ELLERY QUEEN?

One of the most venerable and venerated names in crime fiction is that of Ellery Queen, the author, editor, and anthologist. "He" was really two cousins who dominated the American detection scene for many years. Curiously enough, after years of success in every entertainment medium, from books and magazines to film, radio, and television, Queen suddenly virtually disappeared. Before the mid-1970s he was a household name. His Spanish Cape Mystery, originally published in 1935, went through seven hardcover printings in North America to 1941, and then as a Pocket Book went through another eleven printings to July of 1944. As late as 1977 he had his own weekly television series on NBC, but thereafter he gradually slipped from public view, and is today remembered only for a mystery magazine. Since Wendy and I took over Whodunit? in mid-2007, I have not sold a single Ellery Queen novel, although we have had many on the shelves. A few weeks ago, I discovered to my surprise that not a single Ellery Queen novel is still in print. Unlike the British Queens of Crime who were his contemporaries and whose works remain republished and still read, Ellery Queen has virtually vanished from the crime scene. What happened?

Ellery Queen was the joint pseudonym of two Brooklyn-born cousins: Manfred Lee (1905-1971) and Frederic Dannay (1908-1982). Their heyday came between 1929 and 1945, during which time they published nearly twenty well-received crime novels, were responsible for a very popular series of weekly radio programmes, and saw many films made from their books. The books, which were the basis of EQ's reputation, were distinguished for their so-called "Fair Play" doctrine, claiming that the reader had all the available information to solve the crime ahead of the detective. Clever puzzle-plotting, much better done than Agatha Christie, was Queen's principal stock-in-trade. Readers and listeners were challenged to solve the cases. The books were not distinguished for depth of character, fine writing, or much other gimmickry.

After World War Two, the collaborators gradually ceased to work together. Lee virtually retired, officially because of an ill wife, and Dannay (who prepared the complex plots) wrote with others, although always under the "Ellery Queen" house name. The later books were not nearly as strong as the early ones, and many in the 50s and 60s were published as cheap paperback originals with covers reminiscent of writers like Mickey Spillane and other pulp fiction writers.

Moreover, the puzzle element gradually went out of fashion in crime writing and simultaneously out of existence in the work of Ellery Queen. A later series set in the small town of Wrightsville, either in New York or New England, never achieved much buzz. The puzzle element disappeared and Ellery Queen the sleuth morphed from a cerebral consulting detective with a strong supporting cast in the early books into a typical fifties private eye acting alone in the later ones. Early Queen surrounded his sleuth with a number of well-realized characters, including Inspector Richard Queen, Ellery's father, Sergeant Velie, a tough and thick-headed New York cop, and an oriental houseboy. There never was a consistent romantic interest, except possibly the houseboy. After 1977, when the television show disappeared from the networks, Ellery Queen's name survived mainly as an anthologist and magazine editor. Dannay did edit the Ellery Queen Mystery Magazine until his death in 1982, and others carried on the tradition.

In short, Ellery Queen failed either to change successfully with the times or to continue to trade on the strength of his earlier reputation. His success as editor and anthologist (especially after both the original collaborators were dead) to some extent disguised the extent of his creative bankruptcy. Nevertheless, the books published before the end of World War Two were clever enough, and deserve more attention than they presently get from crime fiction buffs.

Mystery Reading Club

The group will be resuming after their winter hiatus. They normally meet on the last Tuesday of the month. Doors open at 6:30 p.m. Meeting starts at 7p.m.

Tuesday, March 30th:
Dashiel Hammett, The Glass Key.

Tuesday, April 27th:
Robert Harris, Enigma

Tuesday, May 25th:
Donna Leon, Death at La Fenice
The books will be available at the store at a 10% discount. Some questions will be circulated ahead of the meeting to get the discussion off to a good start. They will be available a few weeks before the meeting on the website and in the store.

Updates are always available on the website or call Jack at the store. All are welcome.

Writer's Group

The writer's group continues to meet at the store on the third Wednesday of the month, at 7 p.m. All are welcome. Call Wendy at the store for more details.

New to Us – by Wendy

Next time you are in the store please look out for a section called New to Us. This will have books that we have missed in the past, been unable to find before now, or series we have lost track of etc. At this time the books featured are Matt Beynon Rees' 'Omar Yussef' series, The Collaborator of Bethlehem, A Grave in Gaze and The Samaritan's Secret. The fourth title in this series, The Fourth Assassin, is due in hardcover later this month.

Another series is G.M.Malliet's 'Chief Inspector St. Just'. The first, Death of a Cozy Writer, won the Agatha for best first novel in 2008. There are two more titles in the series, Death and the Lit Chick and just published Death at the Alma Mater.

A popular series, Alys Clare's 'Hawkenlye' books, has also been missing from our shelves for a while.

The last title we had in paperback was The Enchanter's Forest (2008!), which was number ten in the series. The next two titles are only available in the larger trade paper format, but we do have both titles, The Path of the Air and Joys of My Life.

In Memorium

Lionel Davidson

The crime writer Lionel Davidson died in England on 21 October 2009. Born in 1922, Davidson was one of those writers who was a favourite with critics but virtually unknown to most readers. His eight published crime books won him no less than three Gold Dagger awards for the best British crime novel of the year, but most readers (including those who patronize this shop) would be hard pressed to name one of them. They were: The Night of Wenceslas (1960), A Long Way to Shiloh (1966, published in the United States as The Menorah Men) and The Chelsea Murders (1978, published in the United States as Murder Games); we have none of these in the shop. Part of the problem was that Davidson did not create a series character or write a series, but he also suffered from the complex off-the-wall and arcane nature of his plots and the sheer erudition of his prose. His final book, Kolymsky Heights (1994), was typical of his work, featuring as protagonist a Gitksan Indian from British Columbia who was a master of disguises and languages and was employed by the CIA, in this instance to infiltrate a top secret Russian research station to liberate an imprisoned scientist.

Robert B. Parker

Robert B. Parker died at his desk at his home in Cambridge, Massachusetts on 18 January. He wrote five pages every day except Sunday. This work ethic produced over 60 books and many short stories. Born in Springfield, Massachusetts, he was educated at Colby College and Boston University, and began writing crime fiction in 1971. His output included thirty-nine Spenser novels, nine Jesse Stones, and six Sunny Randalls. In recent years he had turned to writing westerns as well as his crime series. Every book was dedicated to his wife.

Brief Book Notes by Wendy

Ann Purser

Many of you are fans of the Ann Purser, Lois Meade series, Murder on Monday, Warning at One etc.. Coming in May will be a spin off of this series featuring Ivy Beasley. Elderly spinster, Ivy Beasley has moved into an assisted living complex and with the aid of her two sidekicks, Ivy is determined to solve the murder of a neighbour. The first book in the new series is called The Hangman's Row Enquiry.

Castle

We are all still wondering who actually wrote Heat Wave. The photograph on the back cover of the book is of Nathan Fillion, the Canadian born actor, who plays Richard Castle in the series. The author blurb on the dust jacket and on our favourite author site, Fantastic Fiction, both give the biographical details of the fictional author, Richard Castle. Certainly the show which airs on ABC on a Monday evening is popular with our customers and we will continue to try and find the author's identity.

Whodunit on the Web - by Sian

I continue to be woefully behind on my reading, although I am currently enjoying Nicola Upson's An Expert in Murder as well as Alafair Burke's Judgment Calls.

What I'm really focusing my efforts on these days is not only trying to expand my mystery reading, but also working on expanding the exposure of the store. The Bumsteds have always been early technology adopters, even if we didn't fully understand how to use it, but we've been slow really to embrace the internet for the betterment of the store. As a result of these efforts, we're hoping that you're going to see more of us online.

The website will continue to be our real home on the web, and as this newsletter going to press will be updated every day in some fashion. Expect to see more new releases, mini reviews, and updates on the world of crime fiction.

We're also hoping to make our presence known on Facebook, and we hope that you'll become a "fan" of the store. You can find us by searching "Whodunit Mystery Bookstore".

Finally, we'll be tweeting every day on Twitter about the goings on at the store. You can follow us by searching for "whodunitwpg".

If you have any ideas of things you'd like to see on the website, Facebook page, or Twitter please let me know at mysterysian@gmail.com.

New Rates Effective Immediately

Calculating postage rates in advance has become extremely difficult. Costs are dependent on weight and size, and Canada adds a fuel surcharge within the country, which is subject to change at any time, as well as GST.

A single paperback within Canada costs roughly $9.00 (including insurance, which is not included in the base rate).

A single paperback to the U.S. costs approximately $8.50 (insurance is included).

Overseas rates are variable although always expensive.

VISA, American Express, MasterCard, or money orders only, please.
